The Smile Of Nice, 2018
Shot on iPhone 10

If you look closely under the red umbrella at the centre of this photo, you'll see four distant feet. The anonymous duo they belong to had just taken off on a parasailing trip above the sea at Nice in the south of France, captured by Hannibal Renberg with his iPhone 10 while on holiday.

"I was walking down the Promenade des Anglais, and noticed these people on the bench. Just below them is the canopy belonging to a parasailing company, and they seemed to be watching the world go by. It was serendipitous timing to capture the parachute in flight where it is."

Renberg, who is French, defines himself as a street photographer with the simple aim of making people feel something when they see his work. "If one of my images makes someone smile, or feel sad, or feel anything, that's good enough for me."

He used Instamatic and Snapseed to capture and edit the photo. "But not too much, or it becomes artificial. You always need a good subject to make the photo interesting." Grace Holliday
